Park-William W. Messer Shoots His Wife and Daughter and then Kills Himself. A Boonton (N. J.) telegram of Friday says: It was a few minutes before 8 o'clock this morning when venerable William W. Messer came into the dining-room of the sant, three-story house, which he had rented for the season, and in which he lived with his wife and daughter, Mary, a woman twenty years of age, but with har

Tracedy at a Breakfast-Table in Boonton

In March, 1871, the Council, in accordance with this ordinance, adopted a resolution giving authority to the Committee on Health or chairman of the Committee on Health) to grant permission tor keeping hoes and pies in the wards named in the ordinance. When the ordinance was adopted, for good reasons shown at the time, Madison Ward was not excepted, and consequently no hogs can be legally kept within its bounds. Jackson Ward has been named since the ordinance was adopted, and is consequently not entitled to the privileges conferred by its provisions.

Mary fell face downward on the crimson carpet, and, screaming with pain, turned and half rose. Her mother, a large, portly weman, had risen to her feet, and was looking with terrified eyes at her husband. Seeming to reason with himself an instant, he again raised the pistol and fired two shots at her. She ran into the front room, closed the door, and sank into a chair. A moment later a fourth shot was heard. The old man had put the pistol to his right temple and pulled the trigger. The ball passed clear through his head, spattering the papered wall with tiny specks of ted. He fell forward dead, his white locks resting against the closed door, his shoulders in a pool of blood, and the pistol by his right hand.

People in the vicinity heard the shots, but paid no attention to them. Mr. De Camp, accompanied by his sister, was driving to the station to come to New York. Having only a few minutes' time he was driving by the Briggs cottage very fast, when he saw Mrs. Messer in the doorway supporting herself against the sill with one hand and beckoning desperately. He pulled his horse to a stand-still, and asked what was wanted.

"Send a doctor," called Mrs. Messer.

"Send a doctor," called Mrs. Messer.

"Send a doctor, quick!"

Thinking that Mr. Messer was suffering from a sudden attack of illness, to which he was subject, Mr. De Camp drove on, and told his sister to drive acound for the doctor when she left him at the station. As they passed the home of Mr. Jenkins, however, they partly stopped and told Miss Mary Jenkins and Enoch Hammond, who were in the yard, that some one was sick at Messer's. Taking a bottle of brandy, these two at once walked through the wooded park to the house. Miss Mary was found lying on the floor in the sitting-room screaming wildly. Mrs. Messer was up-stairs uttering shriek after shriek. Thinking that Miss Mary had an attack of hysterics Mr. Hammond gave her some brandy and ran up to Mrs. Messer. As she rose from the bed at his entrance he saw that her clothing was dripping with blood, but she refused to say what was the matter. She was able to walk down stairs assisted by Mr. Hammond. As he started for the dining-room to get water Miss Mary shouted: "You musn't go in there! Don't do it, I tell you." Mr. Hammond, however, opened the door far enough to see the tragedy that had been enacted. As he did so Dr. J. G. Ryerson arrived.

"I want to apeak to you alone," said Miss Mary to the Doctor. As he bent over her she said: "Father has shot us all. He's dead in the other room. Don't let them know."

dead in the other room. Don't let them know."

Her legs were paralyzed, which showed that her spine had been struck by a builet. On examinatin it was found that the bait entered her back just above the small portion and two inches to the right of the spine. The builet went downward and forward, striking the spinal column. Dr. Ryerson says the wound is very similar to the one which killed President Garfield. Miss Messer cannot recover, say the physicians, though she may live for some days. She is in terrible agony constantly.

The first builet fired at the wife hit Mrs.

Mrs. Messer's courage after her fatal injuries was remarkable. After calling for helpas-she did, she even wanted to get water for her daughter from the kitchen, and only the dead body of her husband in the room between kept her back. She then went up-stairs, and, thinking that her daughter could not hear her, gave way to her sufferings. When assistance came she her sufferings. When assistance came she again summoned up courage, and when the doctor arrived was reclining in a chair in the sitting-room. drives have luxuriant foliage and afford ample shade.

Persons who are familiar with the European linden wonder why our authorities selected that variety for the grand drive. The European linden will almost invariably lose its foliage after July, and if a leafless tree during August and September is undesirable on our grand drive, would it not be best to correct the mistake of planting made in 1876 and now plant trees that will afford shade throughout the season?
